

Expression of Interest

Bhutan Broadcasting Service Terms of Reference for Reality Shows for 2022 and beyond (Updated, September 2024)

Background

The first reality show on the BBS was broadcast in 2008. It was an instant hit. The viewers, especially those living in rural areas, loved it. Its popularity grew and so did the numbers. But it wasn't without problems.

The reality shows were being organised by the same reality show organisers year after year and the people started complaining. They said they too should be given the opportunity of hosting reality shows on the BBS.

There were also complaints that a lot of money was involved and the talent shows weren't necessarily being won by the talented.

In 2022, the BBS introduced the system of selecting the reality shows by publicly inviting expressions of interests to address these issues.

New applicants

At the time, there were six reality shows;

1. Druk Super Star
2. Druk Gi Kalapingka
3. The Voice of Bhutan
4. Drinchen Phami Sungkey
5. Druk Gi Tsepem
6. Palden Drukpa

In addition to the six reality shows, there were six new applicants, waiting for the opportunity to host their own shows on BBS. They had applied for and been granted permits by BICMA to host shows on the BBS.

They constantly asked the BBS management to give them the opportunity to host their shows on BBS. They said the BBS should not give the opportunity to the same six reality show organisers year after year. They argued that, as a public service broadcaster, BBS should give the opportunity to all interested Bhutanese.

Talent show not being won by the talented

In the past, the reality shows selected the winners by votes through SMS. Since 2018, the reality show organisers started using mBoB, mPay and other banking apps in addition to the SMS votes to decide the winners.

Using the banking apps (mBoB, mPay), the contestants were asked to deposit money directly into accounts the show organisers opened for the purpose. The amount decided who remained in the competition and who was eliminated. Ultimately, the money decided the winner. The amounts were not disclosed to the participants, BBS, or the public.

Although this payment was called a voting system, votes were bought and not cast. Some of the contestants had to resort to selling property, borrowing money and reportedly other means.

This practice was disallowed since it went against the principle of a talent competition and also degraded the image and reputation of the show.

Revenue generation for reality shows

The reality show organisers keep 80% of the revenue from the SMS votes.

The two telecos receive 20%.

In addition to the revenue from the SMS votes, the reality show organisers get eight minutes of advertisement airtime every hour.

Each show lasts up to two and half months, over ten weeks. This translates to eight hours of advertisement airtime for the reality show organisers to sell.

In addition, they can look for sponsors.

BBS' role

The BBS provides all the professional support. It provides the studio, the airtime, the equipment and the personnel. It shall provide the cameras, the cameramen, the video editors and the graphics designers .

As a fee, BBS charges Nu. 70,000 (seventy thousand Ngultrums) per episode if the show is hosted at a BBS studio and Nu. 50,000 (fifty thousand Ngultrums) if it is hosted at other studios.

Initially, the BBS was paid 20% of the SMS votes.

In 2010, that was Nu. 1.9 million from just one show, the Druk Star.

In 2011, there were two shows – Bhutan Star and Druk Super Star. From the former the BBS received Nu. 2.5 million and from the latter Nu. 2.8 million.

The amount was slashed by more than half when it was replaced with a fixed rate per episode.

The way forward

In 2022 when the guidelines were introduced, there were six reality shows. There were also six new applicants.

For equity and fairness, the BBS proposed to invite Expressions of Interest from interested individuals and parties/firms to organise reality shows.
